

Seven (7) PhD Student Positions

[Ref # ORZ-0842]

The research group of Fungal Immunology at the IMBB under the European Program ERC-2019-COG iMAC FUN (864957), entitled “Dissecting novel mechanisms of iron regulation during macrophage-fungal interplay.” Program Coordinator Prof. George Chamilos invites applications for seven motivated PhD students to assist with the role of lipid metabolism in antifungal host defense of phagocytes

About the lab

The lab is interested in identifying novel mechanisms regulating host-fungal interplay in phagocytes, physiologically and in the disease setting

About the project: The lab has identified a novel antifungal host defense pathway regulated by physiological free fatty acids (FFAs). The central role of host lipids both as signaling molecules and as antifungal effectors will be characterized with the use of transgenic mice and primary human phagocytes using advanced live imaging techniques.

Position Description:

Highly motivated and experienced PhD students will investigate antifungal immunity in transgenic cPLA2 and HIF1 α conditional ko mice, focusing on functional responses on the phagosome biogenesis in macrophages and in coordinated neutrophil clustering in neutrophils.

Required qualifications:

- BSc in Molecular Biology
- Master in Molecular Biology
- Currently enrolled as a student in a PhD program in Biology at a Greek university
- Excellent oral and written skills in English language
- More than 3 years’ experience in molecular biology, biochemistry, and cellular biology assays on autophagy.
- Proven experience in animal work in transgenic mice

Desired qualifications:

- Experience in advanced imaging techniques
