One (1) Research Assistant Position

[Ref # ORZ-0856]

The Arthropod Disease Vector Biology lab (<https://www.imbb.forth.gr/en/research>), headed by Dr. Michail Kotsyfakis, invites applications for one research assistant position to work on the newly funded EU HORIZON-JU-GH-EDCTP3-2024-01-two-stage project entitled: “Resilience Enhancement for Ticks and Tick-Borne Diseases in Sub-Saharan Africa” (Acronym: ResTick).

Job Description: We are looking for a motivated individual—ideally with a background in data science, statistics, or a related field—to join a project investigating the ecological and evolutionary dynamics of tick-borne viruses. The candidate will participate in data analyses, predictive modeling and contribute to statistical cross-regional comparative research.

About the Lab and Position: The successful applicant will join a multidisciplinary team of statisticians, data scientists, biologists and chemists working on vector biology and host-pathogen interactions. The individual will contribute to data curation and interpretation, assist in supervising junior students, and be involved in scientific dissemination, paper writing, and conference presentations.

About the Project: The project focuses on understanding tick-virus interactions across continents, using Crimean-Congo Hemorrhagic Fever Virus (CCHFV) and Hyalomma ticks as primary models. The main research themes include:

1. Ecological dynamics of zoonotic viruses: Investigate how virus, tick vector, host species, geography, and climate interact to shape transmission.
2. Tick population structure and speciation: Use hybridization and field data to assess genetic diversity and evolutionary processes.
3. Eco-climatic modeling: Develop models to assess how climate change and habitat disruption affect the spatial and temporal patterns of vector-borne diseases.
