

One (1) PhD Student Position

[Ref # ORZ-0901]

The Arthropod Disease Vector Biology lab (<https://www.imbb.forth.gr/en/research>), headed by Dr. Michail Kotsyfakis, invites applications for one PhD Candidate to work on the newly funded EU HORIZON- JU-GH-EDCTP3-2024-01-two-stage project entitled: “Resilience Enhancement for Ticks and Tick-Borne Diseases in Sub-Saharan Africa” (Acronym: ResTick).

Job Description: We are looking for a motivated individual—ideally a PhD candidate with a background in biology or a related field—to join a project investigating the ecological and evolutionary dynamics of tick-borne viruses. The candidate will participate in data analyses, predictive modeling and contribute to statistical cross-regional comparative research.

About the Lab and Position: The successful applicant will join a multidisciplinary team of biologists, data scientists, statisticians and chemists working on vector biology and host-pathogen interactions. The individual will contribute to data curation and interpretation, and will be involved in paper writing, and dissemination activities.

About the Project: The project focuses on understanding tick-virus interactions across continents, using Crimean-Congo Hemorrhagic Fever Virus (CCHFV) and Hyalomma ticks as primary models. The main research themes of the present position include eco-climatic modeling, developing models to assess how climate change and habitat affect the spatial and temporal patterns of ticks, contributing in evaluating risks of tick vector-borne diseases transmission.
