One (1) Postdoctoral Researcher Position [Ref # ORZ-0575]

The research group of Fungal Immunology at the IMBB under the European Program ERC-2019-COG iMAC FUN (864957), entitled "Dissecting novel mechanisms of iron regulation during macrophage-fungal interplay." Program Coordinator Prof. George Chamilos invites applications for one (1) motivated Postdoctoral Research Fellow to assist with the mechanism on the role of specialized autophagy pathways in antifungal host defense of macrophages

About the lab

The lab is interested in identifying novel mechanisms regulating host-fungal interplay in phagocytes, physiologically and in the disease setting

About the project: The mechanism of recruitment of autophagic machinery in the fungal phagosome and the functional role of this process are incompletely understood at the cellular and molecular level. In particular, the role of single membrane LC3 lipidation on phagosome biogenesis and antifungal host defense, the fungal molecules activating this pathway and the upstream regulators will be characterized with the use of transgenic mice and advanced live imaging techniques.

Position Description:

A highly motivated and experienced researcher will investigate antifungal immunity in WD40 Atg16L1 knockout mice, focusing on functional responses on the phagosome biogenesis and membrane repair during Aspergillus fumigatus infection

Required qualifications:

- PhD in Molecular Biology
- Excellent oral and written skills in English language
- More than 3 years' experience in molecular biology, biochemistry, and cellular biology assays on autophagy.
- Proven experience in animal work in transgenic mice

Desired qualifications:

- Relevant publication in the autophagy research field
- Experience in advanced imaging techniques

	Evaluation criteria	Maximum score
